BONERS, MOANERS, and GROANERS

For more than thirty years I have taught those darling little children in the grade schools. It has been necessary for me to give them examinations on what they have studied and learned. Sometimes the examination is written. Other times it is oral. I also have to ask them questions about what they are doing. One thing is certain: If the teacher is not clear in pronouncing the word or doesn't make the meaning of the thought clear, those kids can give you unusual answers.

A child's imagination should be developed. So the topic I gave to the class was this: "What would I do if three space ships landed from Mars. As you will see, Freddy knew what to do. This is what he told his classmates, and also myself, of the situation.

"So the space ships come down with a big noise. I'm not a bit scared because I know what to do. I watch the door of one space ship open. Out comes something. It has three heads, five legs, and seven arms. It comes up to me. I start talking first. I tell him to get back into his space ship. All got to go back to Mars. Otherwise I will destroy them. He doesn't believe me. He sends some kind of a message. They all come out to me. So I get out my ray gun. First I blast the space ships. They burn. Then there are no more. Next I get out my paralysis gun. Aim it at all of them. There they are. I call the police. They come. Next day I get ten medals. I am a hero. End of story."

I should have kept my mouth shut. But being a teacher, I just had to ask the question: "From where would you get a ray gun and a paralysis gun?"

"From my brother's toy set," was the answer he gave to me.

I also learned that I am much smarter than Sally's father. He happens to be a full professor in college. His specialty is English literature.

"You are much smarter than my father," she told me at lunch time. "You can spell words. He can't. Shame. Bet he failed in spelling."

"What makes you say this, Sally?" I wanted to know.

"When I ask you how you spell a word you write it on the blackboard," she explained. "When I ask my father how to spell even a small word. I mean I don't know it. He tells me to look it up in the dictionary. I tell him if I knew how it was spelled, I would not have to look it up in the dictionary. But how can I look up how it is spelled if I do not know how it is spelled?"

Then one day my principal sent for me and told me the good news.

"You will take the standard course in First Aid. If anything happens you will be able to help. You will also do your best to get some of the ideas and material you have learned to your students."

I am certain if he knew of some of the things that were going to be told to me by my class, he would have had a fit. I took the course and passed. There was the day I decided to tell the students something about Artificial Respiration. I looked at Tom and told him to come up to the front of the room.

"I will demonstrate Artificial Respiration on you," I said.

He screamed at the top of his voice. You would think he was going to be killed.

"Don't dare give me anything artificial! Only natural respiration!"

I never could figure out where he got that feeling. Then I asked the class this question.

"What should a person do who goes to a lake where the water is very deep and he can't swim?"

"He should not try to swim a mile," said Ronald to me.

After thinking over his answer I concluded he was correct. Even though it wasn't the answer I wanted to the question.

There had been a fire in our town. So this was the time to get some ideas across.

"What would you do if you were trapped on the third floor of a burning building?" I asked.

Of course I wanted them to learn that you do not put a handkerchief around your mouth. Leonard replied to me:

"I would immediately run downstairs. Go into the street and look for the fire alarm box. Ring it. Wait till the fire engines came. Then show them where the fire was."

I didn't try to ask him how he got out of the building. I guess I was too tired that day. But knowing Leonard, I am certain he would have escaped, even if he had to fly out of the window
